Comments: I am adamantly opposed to the roundup, holding, and sale of wild horses. Many of these horses are sold to kill buyers who ship them to Mexico to be slaughtered for meat.

It is illegal to eat horse meat in the U.S.

Federal Law protects wild horses and burros. They are a national treasure. It's our duty to protect them.

There is no scientific evidence that wild horse populations damage the environment. In fact, it's proven that grazing animals actually benefit it. The issue is one of money - wild horses compete with livestock for resources, and horses don't pay a grazing fee.

It's crucial that wild horse advocates, wildlife biologists and others with significant experience on this issue be consulted about this plan. Those voices with a stake in the removal of the horses (ranchers and politicians) carry the most weight.

We need transparency to show who is really benefiting from this!
