Comments: The focus on wild horses distracts from the massive damage caused by the livestock industry. However, the reality is that wild horses are only bit players in a very real, West-wide ecological battle in which the livestock industry is the principle antagonist. Domestic cattle and sheep (not horses) are the most significant overpopulated invasive species, competing for the public land that our wildlife - elk, mule deer, pronghorn, and bighorn sheep - need to survive. Once they are gone where will the livestock industry focus on next ? Humans ruin everything instead of just leaving them alone. It's all about GREED !
