Comments: Growing up I spent a lot time with my family and friends in the Sandia mountains. Their natural beauty is astounding. Many of my friends are from local pueblos that hold these mountains sacred. They have explained to me the heartbreak of seeing their sacred places mismanaged and developed for tourists and recreation. So much of their lands has been taken and destroyed for profit with little to no consultation. This roller coaster stands as another affront to the indigenous peoples of New Mexico and continues the US government policy of destruction and poor communication. Do not build this monstrosity in a sacred place. You will face strong resistance and be shamed for your greedy profit driven motives.
