Comments: The implementation of a roller coaster on the top of the Sandias is a blatant bid for profit and completely neglects the values of preservation and cohabitation that the forest service should hold. The Sandia mountains have been here long before us and hold eons of history and generations of families, not only human. As Albuquerque and other cities expand, we must be mindful of not allowing short sighted spending sprees to impact our long term vision for sustainability and land stewardship. It is now that our real values are called into question. There are multiple other ways to encourage engagement and participation in the outdoors. To say that the best answer involves the erection of large immobile structures for skiing "off season" is lazy work. To chop down parts of the forest, move around mounds of earth, and destroy habitat in the very land one totes to protect, all for the thrill of a man crafted adrenaline boost, is something out of an apocalypse novel. It's hypocritical and saddening and I look forward to seeing the EIA. Please do not invest further time, energy, and money into this project that is deluded and confused.
