Comments: Building a roller coaster in sacred mountains is, with all-do respect, absolutely ludicrous and uncivil. Forests are being partly destroyed and picked from everyday. The material we receive is used for many useful purposes. I'm not saying it's justified, but it is used for necessary things. A roller coaster, on the other hand, would not only be destroying an entire chunk of an ecosystem, but the result would be people having a little fun on a roller coaster? We're willing to sacrifice an entire ecosystem for that? It's absolutely not worth it. Please reconsider. Thank you
