Comments: The idea of a roller coaster in the Sandia Mountains strikes me as completely ridiculous. Not only is it wildly unnecessary and a wildly unnecessary allocation of anyone's money (public or otherwise), there is no way that it will not have an impact on the natural processes and species of the mountain. It would be loud and disruptive, the construction process would most certainly speed up erosion and the destruction of plants and species that make their home in this hypothetical construction site. Necessary maintenance/safety checks would ensure that the environment would be disrupted as maintenance workers drive to check on the roller coaster and move around in the area. And on top of that, the whole disaster would encourage more green house gas emissions as people commute to the mountain for this roller coaster. I really hope that this idea will not move forward; it is not in the best interest of the mountain and its environment, which should be our top priority at all times.
