Comments: The last five years have been a rollercoaster of politics, identity, and emotion. One major thing that has been allowed to rear its ugly head from the shadows is racism. Many people, especially those in positions of power, have made known to the public their racist ideologies. And New Mexico is not immune to that human disease. That human disease has taken root in the Sandia Mountains. These majestic mountains are sacred to the Sandia Pueblo. They are revered and respected. They hold history and healing. They straddle both past and future. They draw the eye. They exude beauty and power. And they should be respected and protected for those qualities. Not whittled down into pieces to the highest bidder. This rollercoaster idea is a disgrace to the mountains. To the people who worship her. To the citizens of Albuquerque and surrounding areas who have appreciated her beauty. Who have found solace and comfort in the hills. To the wildlife that call her home. This idea is deplorable. It's capitalistic scum. Please do the world a favor and keep your hands off her.
