Comments: I'm a frequent visitor to New Mexico - I love it's culture, it's natural beauty, and have many close friends as well as family I try to visit as often as possible. Putting an amusement park ride on a natural wonder is honestly one the stupidest and most repugnant ideas I've ever heard.

You should be ashamed for even considering it. This is sacred Tiwa land, what you are suggesting is colonial violence. This is a white supremacist action - completely disregarding the history and significance of this site to the indigenous inhabitants of this land. It would be like something bulldozing your place of worship to erect a carnival. Except your place of worship is brick and mortar and can be rebuilt. It's also not as unique, ancient, or beautiful as the Sandia mountains.

This is also unnecessarily harmful to the environment and local fauna. Noise pollution, light pollution, litter, increased human presence ...And for what? Blighting the areas most famous landmark instead of driving to Texas for a roller coaster? So short sighted. Are you sure a 5 year old didn't come up with this?

The Sandia mountains do more for New Mexican tourism than a rollercoaster could even scratch, and it's a free natural wonder that maintains itself.

If you do proceed with this asinine and insulting idea, I will make to look up every single business involved in or supporting this project and ensure myself and my connections in the area never spend another red cent there again. Tbh I would be so disgusted that I would consider only spending money at indigenous businesses when I visited.
