Comments: The Sandia Mountains offer fine recreational opportunities for those who appreciate wilderness, wildlife, scenic variety, and the beauties of nature. Totally unneeded is a manmade, noise-making, crowd-drawing recreational construction that will adversely impact wildlife, habitat, and surrounding areas and will decimate some forest in the process of its development. People already have a ski run to enjoy if they want to choose that for recreation. Care and concern for the well-being of the flora and fauna of the region make new development totally inappropriate. The Sandias have miles of hiking trails for people to enjoy and they allow for much-needed exercise for human beings. Let us respect nature and not approve this unwarranted development. Save our environment and our future from such greedy and unprincipled projects.
