

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 4/5/2021 10:07:11 PM

First name: Julia

Last name: Rosenstein

Organization:

Title:

Comments: I would like to point out prior to WWI we had millions of wild horses all across our western deserts and plains. Take note that all species numbers were up from ungulates to sage grouse (some 16 million). The problem is not wild horses. The problem is too many human beings. The issue is not "how do we control horse populations." The issue is "how do we control human populations." Species numbers are dropping because we have billions more people in the world than we did in 1920. More mining, more drilling, more suburbs, more water usage, everything people do takes away from our planet. So leave the horses alone and promote vasectomies in humans, and also babies are no longer necessary. There are too many unwanted children in the world, anyhow. Give them homes first.