Comments: I have lived for eight years in a small camper out West, visiting nearly every national forest in all the Western states. Grazing uniformly destroys the land's health, and I oppose any expansion or continuation of grazing policies on any public lands, including in our National Forests. For the sake of biodiversity regeneration, and for mitigating climate change, I ask the National Forest to manage lands under their jurisdiction exclusively for habitat protection and vitality. That means ending all grazing on public lands West of the Rockies.
