Comments: Good afternoon and thank you for reading these comments.

At present I am assisting covid clients and do not have time to give this the full commentary it deserves.

In short, there is enough science and study to support -- and even demand -- that national forests be preserved at the greatest level possible, providing them with robust safety, protection, and reclamation requirements for the environmental, ecological and even human use and enjoyment benefits they provide.

National Forests are irreplaceable regardless of timeframe -- and certainly when timeframe is calculated.

Please do all you can to save, restore, preserve, protect and defend these national and international treasures. We need them far more than they need us ... and when they're gone, they're gone ... and thus so might we follow as well. Failing them, and thus ourselves, is not a chance we ought to take.

Thank you again,

Jordan Glass
