Comments: livestock grazing on public land is not a good principle to continue. It might be economically feasible for the rancher's bottom line but it is harmful to our environment. Public lands were designated to remain in their natural state and not defaced by livestock grazing. The Methane from the manure is harmful to our air quality and goes against the many attempts to control the CO2 and methane levels of our federal and state governments.

Why is it necessary for caring citizens, who are interested in maintaining a healthy life, to continually petition our government agencies to make healthy decisions when they are supposedly charged with doing that very same thing as part of their existence? Isn't that what my taxes pay for? I probably pay more taxes than the ranchers and corporations.
