Comments: Keep the wild lands wild. The Rangeland Management Directives have the potential to significantly affect millions of acres of public land, including Wilderness, where livestock grazing is fundamentally at odds with the mandate of the Wilderness Act that Wilderness remain "untrammled." Livestock do significant damage to the land. Livestock grazing on National Forests, including millions of acres of Wilderness, significantly degrades our public lands. The land should be protected for greater use by the general public as a fully protected environment. The Forest Service must do the right thing for Wilderness, other public lands, and wildlife by dropping its proposed Rangeland Management Directives.
