Comments: Grazing on public lands, National Forests and Wilderness must not be permitted.

Revisions to the Forest Service grazing policy should encourage restriction of grazing across the Nation Forest system, including Wilderness.

Recovery of endangered, imperiled and threatened species needs to be a priority to the National Forest and livestock grazing management decisions so as NOT to jeopardize species recovery.

Livestock grazing fuels climate change and biodiversity crises. To graze on Wilderness areas, National Forests, and public lands is a grave mistake.

The Forest Service must drop it proposed Range Management Directives and use a transparent, public , scientific process that complies with federal laws and the National Environmental Policy Act.
