

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 4/16/2021 9:28:14 PM

First name: Leslie

Last name: Kuhn

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Dear USDA Forest Service,

I urge you to do the right thing for Wilderness, public lands, wildlife, and the people who appreciate them by dropping the proposed Rangeland Management Directives

The Rangeland Management Directives have the potential to significantly and adversely affect millions of acres of public land, including Wilderness, where livestock grazing is fundamentally at odds with the mandate of the Wilderness Act that Wilderness remain untrammeled.

Livestock grazing on National Forests, including millions of acres of Wilderness, significantly degrades our public lands. Impacts from grazing must be fully examined and addressed through a transparent, public process that complies with federal laws, including the National Environmental Policy Act.

Any revisions to Forest Service grazing policies should encourage and prioritize voluntary grazing permit retirement to reduce permitted livestock grazing across the National Forest system, including within Wilderness, in order to protect Wilderness, other public lands, and wildlife.

The FS should not return grazing to the extreme levels permitted in the 1960s when it is clear conditions cannot support increased, or even current, grazing levels.

The Forest Service must develop policies to ensure the agency will maintain authority for grazing management decisions and hold grazing permittees accountable for the impacts their livestock have on public lands.

The recovery of imperiled or threatened species needs to be prioritized on National Forests, with livestock grazing managed so as not to jeopardize species' recovery.

This leftover Trump administration proposal to increase grazing would not only fuel livestock grazing's contribution to the climate and biodiversity crises, but also be directly counter to the Biden Administration's 30x30 land conservation agenda by sacrificing what could be protected lands to the commercial livestock industry.

The Forest Service should do the right thing for Wilderness, other public lands, and wildlife by dropping its proposed Rangeland Management Directives.

If the Forest Service wishes to amend its directives, the Forest Service must undertake a more comprehensive rulemaking process that complies with the National Environmental Policy Act.

Thank you for your consideration!