Comments: I'm surprised that my government especially the U.S. Forest Service does not understand that forests are not suitable for grazing cattle. Perhaps, you are confused. Forests have trees. Healthy forests have lots of trees. Cattle eat grasses from pastures or prairies or some form of grassland. Cattle deter new forest grow or regrowth.

This is progressively destruction of the forests...

Lawmakers clearly understood this when they wrote and passed the Wilderness Act into law. In fact, they use the term "untrammeled" in describing how our forests were to be kept. Have you seen the condition of a small pasture with a large herd--"untrammeled" would be the wrong description. You are intentionally violating the laws by allowing cattle to graze on lands ostensibly under your protection. Yeah, I know there may be rules which undermine or literally contradict the letter of that laws. BUT I certain the law take precedence!

Now that Trump is gone--stop the sabotage!

Work to repair the damage.

And stop letting private concerns graze their cattle on our national forest lands!
