

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 4/16/2021 9:55:03 PM

First name: Betsy

Last name: Shanafelt

Organization:

Title:

Comments: The Wilderness Act specifically states its purpose is to keep wilderness "untrammeled." Excessive livestock grazing does the opposite and puts many fragile systems at risk, so we should be containing, not expanding. We need healthy forests. Every regulation today should be considered through the lens of climate change and what earth-altering events it may bring, so NOTHING should be granted in perpetuity or for passage from one generation to the next. When our environment changes, we must be able to adapt. Commercial livestock production must not be allowed to jeopardize vital forests or put a lock on their use.