

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 4/16/2021 11:27:07 PM

First name: Anni

Last name: Long

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Livestock grazing is in direct conflict with the Wilderness Act. Grazing in National Forests and Wilderness is degrading Our Public Lands. The Forest Service should be pursuing goals to REDUCE grazing on Public Lands. Because the Forest Service has often and repeatedly failed to hold grazing permit holders accountable for violating the terms of their permits, or for the negative impacts their livestock has on Public Lands, the reduction of grazing areas should be the primary goal. The proposed Rangeland Management Directives do the opposite of protecting Wilderness, Public Lands and Wildlife and should be dropped. Any changes must follow proper procedures and lean towards conservation and environmental protection.