Comments: It's long been obvious that federal land agencies use "target" management and seek to use our wild lands for only human benefit. You have all the scientific information to know that cattle degrade water, displace wild life, trample native grasses, perennials. The consequences are always material. We humans are the only species with agency. All other life has to try and adapt to our persistent invasion and destruction of the balance that is a wild ecosystem.

What is your ethic? Surely some of you at the Forest Service know this use is not ethical, or do you?
