Comments: I'm deeply concerned about opening National Forests to livestock grazing. You've read all the reasons why thousands of times before. Basic principal: do not subsidize production of a food source that contributes to the increase in cancer and obesity in our citizens. With the western United States poised for another disastrous year of drought and wildfires we need to do all we can to return the National Forests to a healthier state of wilderness, not further degrade it for the benefit of cattle ranchers. Keep the cows out of our National Forests.

If more grasslands are needed, I know of a lovely little range at Rancho Mar-a-Lago in Florida.
