Comments: The Trump administration's proposed change to grazing regulations should not be approved. Cattle grazing has little environmental benefit in the inland west, and especially in forests where buffaloes did not graze prior to European eradication. Cows degrade wildlife habitat, erode soil, and facilitate invasion of juniper and noxious exotic grasses and weeds. Natural ecosystems need to be maintained or restored on all National Forests, and especially in wilderness. We should be looking at vacating more grazing allotments, and not restocking them with new permits. Scratch the proposed revisions to grazing regulations.
