Comments: Having spent 35 years in the USDA primarily as a range manager, I will briefly say without any hesitation that all grazing by livestock on public lands is the financial, economic, and environmentally correct thing to do, and as soon as possible. This includes horses. I mean all lands, including wilderness and parks. This has repercussions in terms of corruption, climate change, religious, and practical land management. The USFS and BLM have been terrible and lackadaisical managers.
