Comments: To Whom it May Concern:
Managing public lands gives the Federal Government a huge ability to carryout necessary environmental policies that are at the core of the world we leave to our children and grandchildren. We need to be the good ancestors that the future generations fondly remember and not selfish and greedy exploiters.

Biodiversity in animal life and plants has suffered horrible under recent land management programs. It must be the core principle reflected in all of the land-use policies by the Forest Service. Only the Federal Government can truly make the systemic impact here because of the expansive land ownership you oversee for the public trust and benefit. Thank you.
