Comments: I quote this and concur.

"This herd may represent one of the only herds left in our country that have not been disturbed, rounded up for nearly 15 years since our lawsuit. They could represent one of the healthiest herds with strong social bonds and functionally healthy behaviors which results from "leaving them alone." Wild horses know best how to limit their growth and survive when the elders remain in charge of their bands. We believe this is happening with the Heber herd. They must be preserved and protected."
