Comments: Generally I tend to fall in the category of leave well enough alone and things will work themselves out. I don't strongly agree or disagree with changing decibels from 93 to 97.

However, don't you think if you left them at 93, particularly if that has been the level for 30 years, manufacturers would figure out a way to meet that noise level? If you were serious and enforced the noise level, you know they would.

I live in Florence and I know the dunes riders in this area are constantly complaining about the forest service no matter what you do. I've ridden on dunes rides and haven't found them particularly noisy so I suspect they're below that decibel mark.

Don't be bullied into making changes just because a group of dunes riders have complained because the majority of people in this area care about wildlife habitat that could be impacted. Do what's right, not what a handful of people are pressuring you into.
