Comments: Don't cave into the macho noisemakers by increasing the allowable noise limit at the Oregon Dunes. This is just one more "enforcement" weakening to accommodate a special interest over the interests of the general public and local wildlife.

Raising the noise level 2 db sounds small enough, except on the decibel scale, that's 4 times the noise!

How does this proposal meet the goal of reducing noise complaints from neighbors? By pretending that the new noise level won't bother neighbors? By telling those suffering that the vehicles aren't making too much noise? By telling them "Move along, nothing to see (hear, complain about) here

Too bad if the available products cant meet the current noise standards. If the rules say the noise limit is "x" , then the producers will have to make a product that meets the standard.

Should the speed limit be raised because studies show people can't control themselves and stay within the speed limit?
