Comments: Forest management, timber cuts, burning etc are so very necessary for a healthy habitat that encourages biodiversity. It is imperative for native species such as grouse & woodcock. They need young forest thickets to feed and raise their broods. I truly hope WV and more states follow suit with proper forest management. It is unfortunate that the general public is not better informed on cutting/burning. Those that have outrage at the mention are ill informed and by opposing such management are damaging the very environment that they believe they are protecting.
