Comments: we have lived in Patagonia for 15 years, and chose to do so specifically because of the unique biodiversity of the area, and have come to regard that precious quality to be under tremendous destructive influences including, but not limited, to manmade extraction and overuse industries, and now, also the effects of that same insult to the environments worldwide. Since the state of Arizona upholds antiquated laws that encourage such misuse, we consider the rules governing environmental protection enforced by the US of A to be our only protection from the threats to our lives, via the disruption of our immediate environment, in many ways, presented by the willful and destructive plans by private corporation for their own single object, monetary gain. The selling of U.S. land would allow them to do exactly that, in whatever way they choose. That would represent an egregious and irresponsible action by any agency that seeks to provide a service to the people and country that it has pledged allegiance to the wellbeing of.
