Comments: I would like to make a comment as an individual.I witnessed the gypsy moth outbreak back in the early 1960's, which defoliated all of the hardwood trees in the higher elevations of the Blue Ridge Management Area located in the Chattahoochee National Forest.Also, the public square in Dahlonega, Georgia, which had street-lights, drew the moths to them at, and the streets were covered with moths, until the streets looked like it had snowed, before daylight.

Yes, I am very much in favor of the forest service doing whatever it can to eradicate these moths and worms, before the hardwoods become like I saw them, for the sake of the wildlife that depends on acorns for winter food. The Native Turkey man;
