Comments: I oppose the aerial spraying for the Lymantria dispar for the following reasons:

1. Exposure of insecticide from aerial application to the general public who use the national forest for recreation. Warnings are insufficient when Americans have unfettered access to their national forests.
2. Unnecessary: primarily weak trees are killed during periods of infestation and infestations generally collapse on their own. Let mother nature take care of this problem.
3. The insecticides kill other beneficial insects.
4. Drift of insecticides from aerial application is unavoidable, causing exposure to animals, people, and private lands.
