Comments: Supposedly civilized humans have done a poor job of managing our environment, which is why we are facing a climate crisis. When hazardous tree management is considered, it should only address removing trees that are a danger along roads or other trails. And in the Wilderness, trees should be left as they fall - that is what happens in the wilderness and nature knows how to take care of fallen trees. Along these lines, fallen trees are an integral part of the forest - they harbor insects and small animals and new growth of plant life. If humans are hiking through the Wilderness area, signage is sufficient to allow them to assess their ability to handle the risk of the wild area.

It is disappointing to hear that chain saws are planned for the maintenance work.

Thank you for your attention to my comments.
