Comments: As Nature disappears from most people's lives, it is incumbent upon us to raise the standards for preserving the wilderness we have remaining. It is the Wilderness that reflects the true abundance of America. Similarly to my experience as a Ranger for Olympic National Park, using hand saws rather than chainsaws in the park is warranted for both sound and safety. As much as possible, dead and dying trees should be left alone to fall naturally, unless they are blocking a trail and then only the necessary portion is removed. Wilderness is where we learn to be more attentive and aware to innate dangers; we don't go to wilderness to be 'protected.' Therefore, society should not encroach by making the wilderness 'safer' on our behalf. With any new developments, avoid encroaching on existing designated Wilderness. Future generations have a right to experience wilderness too. There are valuable life lessons that can only be learned in a true wilderness setting.
