

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 11/13/2021 5:13:01 AM

First name: ERIKA

Last name: TOTH

Organization:

Title:

Comments: After we have lost millions of trees to forest fires again this year, one would expect the Forest Service to leave alone the trees that still stand. I have visited some of the Wilderness areas where the Forest Service plans to use stinking, noisy chainsaws to cut trails. "Wilderness" means just that: areas with forests, foot path trails, lakes and creeks as nature created it all. Since forest fires have become the tragic "norm" of our climate, allow people who love these Wilderness lands to see the destruction brought about by climate change and grieve over the lost lives - trees and wildlife. That is the natural way to experience those lands now. Instead of destruction, the Forest Service should concentrate on replanting trees! That would make the public much, much happier!