Comments: i fully support the control burn and thinning of the dixie national forest. i have been coming to the dixie national for over 45 years, it defently it getter thicker and that means less food for the animals less open forest to recreate in. the deer need more food sources with the drought there is plenty of water sources in the duck creek and panguitch, the livestock growers maintain tanks and some springs which is a good thing.

also i resent the environmental groups that always are against everything that the forests service and bam or state recommends. they are so called experts well i also am a expert and a stake holder all groups should have a say not just the environmental groups that always want their way over everyone else thank you
