Comments: Seems to me, after reading many of the "public comments", they're mostly exclusionary to their preferred method of recreation. The mtn bikers want it to themselves, the hikers want it to themselves, etc. Public lands are to be managed by the federal government for all users. The idea of public lands isn't an exclusionary aristocracy of self interest. As an avid Mtn biker, backcountry skier, hunter, snowmobiler, hiker, conservationist, environmentalist, snowmobiler, fisherman, paraglider/speedrider I understand this. It's unfortunate so many want to privatise the use of "public lands" for their own use. There are plenty of wilderness areas in Colorado closed off to most users already. We don't need more boundaries, regulations, and encroaching government than we already have. What we need is advocates of educating user groups with other unfamiliar user groups so we can all understand each other and get along instead of excluding and isolating user groups further. Therefor, I strongly oppose any further restrictions in the new forest management plan.
