Comments: I would think that the Forest service would be the last people to suggest constructing this tower in such a majestic, peaceful area such as this. Besides being unpleasant to look it would also be a huge reminder of not being able to escape from the everyday grind, which Rimrock provides. What no one mentioned is the flashing lights that go along with it to provide warning to aircraft. As there is an emergency airport at Rimrock, this could be a hazard to pilots as well. People need a place where they can get away and relax and not be reminded of the cities. It's not that big a deal to go to the other end of the lake to make a call. First responders can use that new radio system their getting that uses other frequencies. We don't need 100% coverage everywhere. Theres always going to be dead areas. Should we start putting them in Wilderness areas as well? How big a footprint should we be making? It would be nice to have a Walmart there as well.
