Comments: This project sounds little more than the commercialization of the wilderness.

A tower of this size and in this location would mar the natural beauty of the region, hampering views of surrounding Cascade mountains. Keep the wild wild. There is nothing wrong with being out of cell service. In fact, many reputable sources tout the benefits of being 'disconnected' and apart from our screens. The wilderness is one of the few places where that disconnection is forced. Keep it that way.

Also, First responders have other options. There are satellite-based communications systems that would aid first responders in this area. Yes, they are expensive, but if AT&T is that concerned with increasing communication between first responders, surely they could fund a grant for such equipment.
