Comments: Highway 133 is one of the last roadways with minimal development in the state of Colorado. This road goes right through animal migration routes as well as running along one of the last un-diverted rivers in the country. I understand that multiuse projects are desired among many individuals but this area should remain minimally altered.

In a compromise, I propose a bike trail that runs along the existing highway. There is room enough along the highway corridor for a paved bike lane to be added.

If a trail is determined to go onto forest service land, there must be a significant barter made in order to preserve the integrity of the area, such as wild and scenic designation of the Crystal River.
