Comments: Public comment is a powerful tool for the people's voice to be heard - after all most of the proposed trail development is on land owned by people who call Colorado and the Crystal/Roaring Fork valley's home. I frequent the Crystal River Valley in all months of the year: cycling, skiing, hiking, mtn biking, etc. The surplus of tourism and development happening in this place demands for more recreational infrastructure. The area trails are becoming more crowded in summer months and are super-steep in most places, relegating most tourists to a few places where over-crowding is exaggerated by lack of options. I am in full support of building this trail from Redstone to McClure Pass. Given the non-motorized and natural surface stipulations, I see it as a great resource for recreationalists, locals, tourists, wildlife, and business.
