Comments: Once again, the US Forest Service is planning a large scale timber and road building project. The project does nothing for the American public except further degrade our public lands. The Forest Service needs to restore lands by closing roads and restoring native vegetation. The project will have a deleterious effect on all of the watersheds within the project area. This project will not only effect fish and amphibians but will effect endangered species such as the northern spotted owl, marbled murrelet, and several salmonid species. The majority of Americans are against their public lands being auctioned off to the highest bidder. Commercial timbering, mining, oil and gas extraction, and off road recreation are not in the public's best interests. Please conduct an thorough EIS review.
