Comments: My teenaged son has spent the last three of four summers at Lake Tarleton and we are forever grateful for his time there. In a teen culture of texting, gaming, snapping, worrying about who's friends with whom, why wasn't I invited out, etc. etc. etc. - the opportunity to be one with nature and ground himself in the beauty of the New Hampshire mountains, surrounded by wildlife, fresh air, calming waters - is something that has helped ground him in what really matters in life. His summers at Lake Tarleton have helped shaped him into a faith-filled, gentle, appreciator of nature. Chipping away at these surroundings chip away at the opportunity to invite our future generations to find the best versions of themselves, away from the noise of the everyday.
