Comments: There are few, if any, places left in New England that are as pristine, wondrous, and accessible as the Lake Tarleton area. For many years, I have been privileged to spend time enjoying and thriving in and around the Lake Tarleton area. I am deeply disappointed that anyone would sacrifice the boundless beauty in exchange for a few meager dollars and a minimal number of jobs. Not only is this short-sighted, it is antithetical to the New Hampshire spirit that scorns government intervention. The short-term gains of jobs and timber income cannot outweigh the long-term benefits of the natural beauty and of responsible conservation of these pristine woodlands. Proposals to rape these lands to benefit a few people, while causing untold damage to the earth and the entire population of New Hampshire are nothing less than shocking. Do not let this plan go forward. New Hampshire deserves better. Lake Tarleton deserves better!
