Comments: I've been working to preserve wildlife in Northern California for the last few years. I can't believe the Forest Service would think it fine to sell off so much critical habitat, whether it be for salmon, spotted owls, or martens. I find it especially shocking that they would target late successional reserves and other areas known to provide better habitat for wildlife. More environmental surveys are needed between all proposed project areas, and agencies should be focused on restoration rather than destruction.
