Comments: I would like the new cabins to have two sources of heat. The Portage Bay West Point Cabin stairs are pretty, but they suck. Mooring bouys would be great if they're feasible. Huge windows, nice decks that are child friendly--possibly with gates to keep the kids contained when necessary, with a bit more rain coverage. While I'm dreaming, the decks could be stepped down to a main level where you aren't sitting in the cabin staring through a railing. Having plenty of hooks/space inside and out for drying gear is a must.

If the cabins are accessible by road, not having them on the "main" road that gets all day traffic would be my choice.

It would also be a nice option to have two cabins built close enough for larger families/groups to stay in while being able to walk between them for social time (like Shakes cabins and the Castle River cabins), but private enough if the cabins are rented by individuals. Tent areas by some cabins would be nice too. Cabins that get some sunshine (I'm pro limbing and brushing out) have my vote. I do not want a cabin at Dry Bay.
