Comments: We got to our present situation because we assumed that nature is doing nothing and we could manage resources better. Why do we think that trying to manage resources ourselves in this way is going to lead to any better result?

This plan looks like a veiled opportunity to harvest timber out of a national forest under the cover of an alleged public good. Same old story. We need to understand the patterns of nature that gave us these fantastic forests in the first place and get out of the way of those forces. This plan is not doing that and will only exacerbate our forestry issues in my opinion.

We need to learn how to control natural burns. I know that sounds a lot easier than it really is but that is the only lasting solution that we can ever really have.
