Comments: Cube Cove is healing through the forces of nature.

It is not appropriate for the Forest Service to defy the letter and spirit of the Wilderness Act by proposing to use motorized vehicles, helicopters, and chainsaws in this area. Placing debris in riparian areas is misguided.

If the Forest Service proposes active restoration, they should use non-motorized hand tools. Less is more so that wildlife will be less affected.

Reclaimed roads should not be converted to trails as that will bring more humans into the area and disturb wildlife.

Remember, the goal is 30/30. We need to allow nature to heal wilderness and be as unobtrusive as possible.
