Comments: I absolutely disagree with any closers. folks have built there lives around being in the backcountry as well as there income. Not only is this an infringement on public access, if you still allow travel on designated routes it's completely unenforceable. The forest service can't even keep people from camping past their 14 day limit. Please make this plan more understandable it's impossible to understand on a phone so I do not feel the NFS is making this information easily accessible to the public. (not everyone owns a computer) As a Idaho resident & property owner I feel this is a direct infringement on our rights to use public property. The areas you are talking about are massive & it's not like folks are out looking for the bears. My question is what's next no hiking no biking in may because some spotted bird is hatching. No I do not agree
