Comments: Without a doubt the worst idea in the history of ideas...except for maybe kale chips, those are bad too. Seriously though...a welcome center and more cabins at Holland Lake? A restaurant to seat 100 plus more outdoors when the weather allows? Modern amenities to please the visitors who EXPECT comfort and convenience when spending time in the woods? Who cares what the visitors expect? They're the ones who decided to spend their leisure time at an old (and beautiful) lodge on a gorgeous lake in the woods. I'm guessing the bottom line is why it matters. The profits are why it matters. The increased appeal to new visitors and the money they'll spend is why it matters. In the meantime we continue to sacrifice irreplaceable places for the sake of profit. Forfeit the rustic experience and we're all left with a place overrun by people who only appreciate its conveniences...there's nothing to be gained. Stop this nonsense before it's too late.
