Comments: Access to Holland lake is via a twisty two lane narrow highway which has a lot of wildlife . I have seen many deer and elk on this corridor. Greatly increasing the traffic to this wilder area of MT is a mistake for the preservation of wild places. Holland lake is special because it is a wild place on-the edge of the Bob Marshall wilderness which is home to USAs largest population of grizzlies. Holland lake lodge and environs being developed by a large corporation to bring in masses for exploitation of nature is not preservation.

Glacier park and Yellowstone are already the sacrifices in MT that attract hordes of people . It attracts so many, numbers have to be limited with the $2 tickets in Glacier park as parking became a big issue . . Turning Holland lake into another populous area pressures the wildlife in MT further. There is only a finite area of wildness left in the whole country. Holland lake does not have to be exploited this way. Keep it small in regards to people, in accordance with maintaining a natural setting for wildlife and preservation of something you can not get back. Wild settings are sacred, finite and of very high intrinsic value in their own right. Please don't destroy this beautiful place forever.
